Now that the short summer season is drawing to a close, it is time to concentrate on back to school stuff. Our kids (grandkids, nieces, nephews, cousins, etc.) are all in the learning mode so why not us?

How many of you are WINGS participants? Did you know it is FREE education? When we sit home with a few spare hours to relax and think about our favorite pasttime (that should be flying for most of us) we can also think about learning something. There are many seminars that qualify for WINGS credit that you can do sitting at home in front of your computer in the span of an hour or two. Rainy day? Take a WINGS class. Airplane in annual? Take a WINGS class. Getting ready to head to the SE Section retreat and never flown through the mountains before? Take a Mountain Flying Seminar that qualifies for WINGS credit.

If you are not familiar with the seminars, you can find information at: <http://www.faasafety.gov>. Create an account and log in to see all the things you can get credit for - both non-flying and flying activities. Your flight instructor can validate your flying for credit. You can also find seminars through your local FAA's Team Representatives and invite your representative to speak about an educational topic for your next 99s Chapter meeting.

Why is this all important? We say your pilot certificate is a license to learn. Every hour that I spend in the cockpit or in a seminar adds to the black bag of experience that goes with me on every flight ... and the good part is that my black bag of experience does not count against my useful load. What does it count for? It provides me with a more favorable rate on my aircraft insurance; it give me something else in my arsenal of tricks when unexpected conditions are not as favorable as I would like; it give me the confidence that my go/no-go decisions are the right ones for me.

So give it a try. Share your educational experiences with your Chapter members. Take a lesson from the youngsters around us and go back to the classroom this Fall and learn something new and fun. then put it to good use on your next flight to the SE Section meeting in September in Biloxi Blue skies

Middle Tennessee Chapter

Diane Denson, Rene Aldrich, Judith Grigsby

On July 13th the Middle Tennessee chapter attended the Bowling Green Family Aviation Day. The event featured food vendors, free flights for children, live music, aircraft simulators, a Flightline of History Exhibit and more. Judith Grigsby donated a variety of homemade crafts that were a hit and we managed to raise more money for our chapter. We also recruited some potential members. Overall the event was a huge success! Thank you to all the members who came out and volunteered their time.

Alabama 99s

Sara Rutland of the Alabama 99s invited her fellow 99s all over for some work and play this month! The August meeting was held on the lake at Sara's on Saturday, August 10th. The meeting was a fun potluck get together. Check out some of these upcoming events below for 99s in the Alabama area!

Upcoming Events:

Chapter Meeting: Sept 21 at Moontown Open House.
The 99s will have a table, we need volunteers.

Section Meeting: Sept 27-29. See flyer attached

FAA WINGS Day: Oct 5 at HSV at the NASA hanger.
The 99s will have a table, we need volunteers.

Chapter Meeting: Oct 24-26. SERFI Fly-In, Evergreen, AL. (serfi.org)

Learning to fly x 2: I have been wanting to get my multi-engine rating for quite some time and thanks to the Wings Over Paradise scholarship, I was able to complete my rating at Jacobs Flight Services in Clewiston, FL (2IS). Since I already had a commercial and instrument rating, I went straight for the commercial instrument add on, meaning I had to complete the commercial maneuvers and instrument maneuvers. Fortunately, I have flown enough recent instrument time that my instrument skills were not so rusty.

Since I typically fly only one airplane now, the first thing that struck me was how discombobulated I was trying to fly in a different airplane. Even if it was off by inches, nothing was where it was “supposed to be”. In spite of “familiarizing” myself with the aircraft first, I spent my first take off looking for the airspeed indicator. It was located directly in front of me, in plain view at eye level - the best place to hide it. We flew around for a bit then came in to land. Again, discombobulation too hold and I made a landing that I was ashamed to claim. We went back to take off again and I was happy that both the take off and the landing were remarkably better.

The next several days of flight training consisted of mostly flying around on one engine; restarting failed engines and waiting for more engine failures. At one point in the pattern practicing soft field landing, I got this feeling of “impending doom”, confident that an engine was going to fail. Sure enough, it did. Those pesky engines seem to fail at the darndest moments too: 2 nm before the FAF; as you approach a hold; in the pattern; on take off. You just never know. I suppose that I was quite surprised to learn that the majority of multi-engine flying is single engine (or more appropriately engine out) training. There is a huge increase in the work load, especially if there is “failure” during the approach. I was already overtasked because I was hand flying an unfamiliar approach with no auto-pilot. You must first and foremost fly the plane then try to deal with the engine out issue while navigating and trying to comply with approach procedures. By the end of a long training day (3 hours) I was singing the engine out mantra in my head “power up - clean up - identify - verify - feather” .

The experience was fabulous, the training valuable and I enjoyed the interaction with the flight school and my instructor. It is certainly something that is worth while to do as you learn how to multi-task times two! Oh, and I passed my check ride on August 5, 2013.

99s working on International 2014

The New Orleans and Mississippi Chapters came together for a working weekend, August 23-25. Much was accomplished and we are rolling toward the good times in New Orleans! The programs are shaping up- check the main web site (www.regonline.com/ninetynines) for the many tours available to be sure if you need to tack on a little extra vacation time. For example the World War II museum is a full day of serious viewing with a wonderful restaurant on site. We advise if you want to travel this era of time you will want a full day.

On our program agenda for conference days (Thursday through Saturday) we will keep you posted of any updates but for now check this out. CAMI, the Civil Aeronautical Medical Institute will be on board with their traveling hypoxia chamber, known as the PROTE, and their special gyro chamber. Prep classes for this will begin as early as Thursday morning because you will have to attend a CAMI training session to go into the hypoxia chamber later. The chamber holds 5 at a time, so you will want to get on the list as early as possible to experience the effects inside the chamber. We have plans for other doctors to address us, the FAAST team with a wings credit presentation, other safety & survival training, weather training, mobile device info, a history of one of our early 99s', and more.

Go on the section web site for regular updates. As we get the info we will get it to you. Get your registration in. Also any questions go to reecieg@me.com. Hope to see you at the section meeting.

ELECTRONIC VOTING via the INTERNET SE SECTION PROPOSES CHANGING OUR METHOD of VOTING

If you have examined the proposed bylaw changes being considered at the fall section meeting, you have seen a change authorizing electronic voting. I believe the change to internet voting for SE Section board officers would result in less expensive elections and get a more rapid vote count. But since this change would affect a fundamental process, I would like each member to consider how this would affect her section's elections.

When you mention electronic voting many people have vivid memories of Florida's hanging chads and the validity of the electronic ballot tabulation. While we don't expect the section offices to be so hotly contested, we would like to have an electronic vote count that is accurate and free of any suspicion of fraud. The nominating committee is considering using the online company www.surveymonkey.com for the next election. Using the contact information for each member from the Ninety-Nines International directory, each voter who had an active email would be sent an electronic link which she would only be able to use once to vote for her choices for each office. Voting is anonymous and can be done through your home computer or electronic device. This would give the teller's committee a much easier job and ballots would be returned more rapidly. Only one vote per member would be allowed, since each member would have only one email address.

And what about the ladies who would prefer to use a paper ballot or do not have access to email? A limited number of paper ballots would be printed and mailed to each member who request them or have no email address on record. Each chapter chair would encourage her members to verify their contact information before the election to insure proper delivery of the electronic ballots.

In addition to saving trees the electronic voting process would save your section money, up to $175 if 80% of our members switched from paper ballots. Please think about this issue and give me some feedback at elherr88@gmail.com.
